EVER GIVEN IS SUCCESSFULLY REFLOATED

After intense efforts to dislodge the Ever Given over the weekend, it has officially been freed and is successfully floating and slowly moving as of this morning.

The vessel is currently being moved to Great Bitter Lake, an open water area that is a halfway point between the north and south end of the canal where it will undergo inspection for damage.

Unofficial reports are that the passage of the Suez Canal is opening today to over 350 vessels that have been waiting at both ends and will take a few days to maintain course. The average allowance of ships that pass through the canal is about 50 per day.

Several carriers have already advised that their vessels are preparing to make passage through the Suez Canal, as they await permission to proceed. Once permission is granted, impacted carriers can recalculate transit times and provide revised estimated arrival dates to their destinations.
